

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

Further spells of rain will move eastwards across Scotland during both Tuesday and Wednesday, with the risk of a spell of heavy and persistent rain later on Wednesday, which could lead to further localised flooding, particularly where the ground is already saturated.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 15:00 on Wed, 01st Jan 2014 until 23:59 on Wed, 01st Jan 2014

Another spell of wet weather is expected on Wednesday afternoon and evening. The rain will become persistent and heavy for a time before clearing away on Wednesday night.

With the heavy rain falling on already saturated ground, the public should be aware of the potential for localised flooding.
